WHEN

22 May 2019 @ 5.00pm

WHERE

OSEA, 16 McBride St Dunedin

ABOUT:

A presentation to employers about the capabilities they've told us they want graduates to have on starting employment, and how technology (an e-portfolio) can help employers have confidence that job applicants actually have the soft skills, or capabilities, that they claim, and also capture ongoing learning by employees.

BACKGROUND:

This project involves investigating the relevance and prioritisation of the 25 learner capabilities by employers in a different part of New Zealand and across a much wider range of disciplines and their industries, communities and professions in which our graduates will be seeking employment.

In the first phase of this project, academic staff interviewed employers from a wide range of industries and professions to test and validate our identified learner capabilities.

The results will reveal how employer priorities differ depending on the disciplines in which the learners have graduated. This data will immediately inform programme design and delivery, to provide learners with opportunities to acquire these capabilities and to gather evidence of their capabilities, which they can use in applying for employment after graduation.

WHO FOR:

- Business owners who employ staff
- Managers and supervisors
- HR and training advisors
- Recruiters
- Anyone interested in the future of learning
